J. Merritt Lear,
HONORARY MEMBER CLASS 1915

EDITH ABBITT

"She that brings sunshine into the lives of others cannot keep it from herself."

BLANCHE ADAMS

"A daughter of the Gods, divinely fair."

LUCY ALLEN

"Tall, stately and demure; noble, steadfast and so pure."

ROSA ALLEN

"For what she saith, ye may it trust
As it by writing sealed were
And virtues hath she many mo'
Than I with pen have skill to show."
—HENRY HOWARD

ELIZABETH ARMSTRONG

"Not warped by passion, awed by rumor,
Nor grave through pride, nor gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good humor
And sensible Melancholy."
—SWIFT

ELIZABETH BARHAM

"Happy am I, from care I'm free;
Why aren't they all contented like me"?

ALICE BASKERVILLE

"Compel me not to toe the mark,
Be ever prim and true;
But rather let me do those things
That I ought not to do."

SELMA BATTEN

"At sight of thee my gloomy soul cheers up
My hopes revive, and gladness dawns within me."
—PHILIPS

MARY A. BELL

"Isn't possible that on so little acquaintance
You should like her? That but seeing you should love her"?
—SHAKESPEARE

LULA BERGER

"A modest blush she wears not formed by art;
Free from deceit her face, and full as free, her heart."

—SPENSER

MARY BERGER

"A maiden never bold,
Of spirit so still and quiet, that her motion
Blushed at itself."

BESSIE BIVENS

"Her shape alone let others prize
The features of the fair;
I look for spirit in her eyes,
And meaning in her air"!

—MARK AKENSIDE

ELIZABETH BOGGS

"I count myself in nothing else so happy
As in a soul remembering my good friends."
—SHAKESPEARE

CALLIE BOLTON

"Never complain. Have a good word for every one or else keep silent."
—HENRY W. BEECHER

MILDRED BOOKER

"Serene, resolute, still Calm yet self possessed."

DOROTHY BRATTEN

"I'll be merry and free,
I'll be sad for nobody."

LOUISE BROOCKS

"She was a scholar, and a ripe and good one."

RUBY BROOCKS

"She feels intuitively that life is good, and that good is coming up through all things."
—W. P. WARREN

LOLA BULL

"A rare compound of oddity, frolic and fun
To relish a joke and rejoice in a pun."

Work like a man but don't be worked to death."

MAGGIE ZERNOW

"I had a thing to say,
But I will fit it with some better time."

The Seniors

"We have climbed tho the rocks were rugged,
And—as we stand on the summits fair
We pause—half afraid, half longing
And gaze into the world that awaits us there.

The world that is cut by many roads
And we know each must choose his one;
And yet we stand—half afraid, half yearning,
And realize 'we have finished, yet just begun.'"

Some of the roads may lead thru forest gloom,
And some thru the meadow wide,
And some on the narrow mountain peak,
And some—by the broad sea side.

And some may be narrow city streets,
And some may be broad and long,
And some may be bordered by mournful sounds,
And some may be gay with song.

But far beyond in the land of the stars
Is the place where all roads end,
And we shall find as we journey there
Each one that we knew again.

PROPHECY

"WHEN nature could endure wakefulness no longer, it was with a struggle I consented to sleep, and when, finally I sank into slumber, it was only to rush into a world of phantasms. Suddenly there came an icy hand upon my forehand, and an impatient, gibbering voice whispered the word, "Arise!" within my ear. I remained motionless, and the cold hand grasped me fiercely by the wrist, shaking it roughly, the gibbering voice said: "Arise! Did I not bid thee arise?" "And who," I demanded, "art thou"? "I have no name in the regions which I inhabit," replied the voice mournfully. "I cannot rest for the cry of these great agonies. These sights are more than I can bear. Come with me into the outer night, and let me unfold to thee wonderful sights."

I looked and behold, a curtain seemed to pass from before my eyes. I found myself gazing into a long room. On both sides of the walls hospital cots were placed. Everything in the room was white and spotless. At the farther end of the room a door was opened and three people entered. They stopped at each cot, but finally they came close enough for me to see them. I decided that they were the doctors and two nurses visiting their patients. When they came closer, I recognized the faces of three of my old classmates at S. N. S. The doctor, the one with the glasses on, was none other than Elizabeth Hancock, and Lola Bull and Elizabeth Semple were the nurses. The latter was experienced in cases. They stopped near enough for me to hear them say that they were expecting Harriett Johns, the famous heart specialist. And then I remembered that Harriett had been interested in hearts when she was at the Normal.

Then all became dark again. While I remained motionless, and endeavored to collect my thoughts, the cold hand clasped me fiercely by the wrist, and the gibbering voice said: "Behold!" A great blinding light flashed before me. When it became dimmer, I could see the interior of (as it seemed to me) a great Cathedral. The voice said, "Listen!" Presently I heard music that seemed to come from another world, it sounded so far away. It came nearer and nearer, and as I listened, my thoughts again turned to S. N. S. Surely I had heard those voices before. I quickly glanced around the Cathedral and was surprised to see so many beautiful Christmas decorations. Then the singers came into view, and as they passed before me I recognized Luey Allen, Mabel Spratley, and Fannie Kent. After they had passed into their seats the music stopped. Presently the music began again and a single voice could be heard singing a "Carol" to the accompaniment of a "Hammer." The voice was that of Harriet Parrish.

I left the Cathedral and was led through a long, dark passage. After what seemed to be an eternity, I came to the end of the tunnel, and glanced around. Something seemed to push me towards a large, white building. On the door there was a sign which read, "Enter the Office by This Door." I entered. A lady arose to meet me. I recognized Mary Codd, and I was not surprised when she told me that she was the President of the organization. I asked for special permission to visit the rooms and was given a permission which allowed me to spend five minutes in each room. She insisted upon sending her assistant with me and immediately sent Virginia Thomas, who told me that the organization was originated for the purpose of studying the human mind, and also for the development of certain desirable qualities in a human being. We entered a room in which there was one teacher with several boys and girls. At first I thought the face of the teacher was familiar but I simply could not place it. But when she said to one boy, "What is a head-light, Wi'um?" I knew that it was Elizabeth Bivins, because Elizabeth never could say William when she was at school. The five minutes was up and so we went into another room. In this room, girls were taught to argue, so I was informed. I didn't expect to find any schoolmates there, because I thought most of them could speak for their side of a question. This class was being conducted by Lizzie Young, assisted by Martha Troughton, Ellen Vaughan and Louise Pruden. It was a large class, and the first member that I recognized was Carey Jeter, and I counted eight others that I had known. They were Olivia Compton, Rosa Caplan, Eva Orr, Genevieve Gresham, Lemma Garrett, Lillie Hughes, Eugenia Harris and Elizabeth Boggs.

In another room we saw Blanche Ellett teaching Dorothy Bratten, Helen Wimbish, Louise Miller, Gertrude Turnbull, Alice Baskerville and Blanche Adams how to cure themselves of bashfulness. Blanche was assisted by Nellie Nance, and Madge Hood. I was told that the class met every day and that a few had private instructions also.

In the library, I found Laurice Glass, the librarian. She showed me several books that had been written by old classmates. One book was entitled "Historial Findings" by Catherine Hill. In a magazine, I found, under the title, "Who's Who and Why," the names of Julia Bond Price, who was said to be a famous man impersonator; Elizabeth Jarrett, a celebrated pianist; Jessie Miller, a Mathematician of great renown; and Elizabeth Painter, the poet.

Suddenly things became very black. I was afraid to move and yet seemed to be moving rapidly. It was light again. I found myself seated in a large theatre. The curtain rose and the famous comedian, Madame Liz-Emma appeared on the stage. When she spoke her voice sounded rather familiar, but not until I had heard the giggles of the famous comedian did I recognize Elizabeth Ewald. Madame Liz-Emma was supported by a chorus, which was composed of Sallie Cassidy, Ruby Brooks, Clairborne Perrow and Mary Rumbough.

Objects began to fade and in a second's time I entered a large building. Strange people were coming and going and every one seemed busy. Some one at my left asked if I wished to see the Editor-in-Chief. I decided that I did and so I was led back into a very business-like looking office. The Editor-in-Chief was Julia Campbell, and she informed me that she was publishing a newspaper; Josephine Wayts was the literary editor; Ella Lester, assistant literary editor; Nancy Ritsch, art editor; Gay Pugh, business manager, and Patsy Watkins, news editor. They were going to publish an "annual" that would please every girl in a certain normal school.

The Virginian

While looking over some old copies of their newspaper, I read the following, which were of much interest to me. The first was an advertisement which stated that the best of dinners could be obtained at a restaurant which was owned by Margaret and Mary Coverston and Sallie Johnson. They claimed that their food was cooked just like the "Greek" used to cook. In another paper I found the announcements of the engagements of Louise Harvey, Susie Hancock and Olive Harris, and the account of the marriage of Laura Lee Eason.

Elfie Meredith, Mildred Booker, Edith Abbitt and Didie Minton had decided to become missionaries and had sailed for the "foreign field."

I left the office—and found myself enveloped in gloom. I seemed to be moving in air, to have "no care—no hope—no effort." A voice called to me out of the darkness, but I paid no attention to the words. The blackness almost consumed me, but the voice spoke on. I began to emerge from total unconsciousness—my eyelids opened—and the voice of Mrs. Slater said, "Mary, it is six o'clock, and you asked to be called at six."

THE SENIOR COURSE OF STUDY.

Last Will and Testament

WE, the Senior Class of 1915, of the State Normal School, Farmville, Virginia, being of sound and disposing mind, do hereby make, publish, and declare this to be our last will and testament, hereby revoking all other wills by us at any time made.

1. To the Juniors, we leave our seats in chapel.

2. To the whole Faculty, we do hereby solemnly will back all the notes they have ever sent us.

3. To Dr. J. L. Jarman, the privilege of reminding the Normal School girls that they are "Ladies."

4. To Mr. Lear, our honorary member, real devotion from the Senior Class of 1915.

5. To Doctor Milledge, four extra periods a week added to his schedule for jokes.

6. To Mr. Eason, a marriage license.

7. To Miss Blackiston, more girls who appreciate the beauty of Nature and short walks to Hampden-Sidney.

8. To Mr. Long, a bucket of cold water to pour over every word he says to relieve it of its dryness.

9. To Miss Munoz, a longer baton so that she may punch every girl in time to sound the first word in the hymns sung in chapel; also a printed notice to be read every morning notifying each girl to look through her books to see if she can find the little gray book taken from Room D.

10. To Mr. Garth, a psychological basis on which to expand.

11. To Mr. Burr, a new Ford.

12. To Miss Carrington, eight hours a day of peaceful solitude in the Library.

13. To Miss Maude K. Taliaferro, several periods each day to be spent in lecturing to the girls on "How to Keep in Line."

14. To Miss London, a warmer room "L."

15. To Mr. Grainger, better material for the "Focus."

16. To Miss Coulling, subscription to the Applied Arts.
17. To Miss March, a room in the Infirmary.
18. To the supervisors of the Training School, girls to equal the girls of 1915!
19. To Miss Tabb, "Black Beauty."
20. To Miss Mary White Cox, our Annual.
21. To Mrs. Harris, an automatic pin puller, and a new red shawl.
22. To Miss Pearl Berger, a home in Lawrenceville, Virginia.
23. To Mrs. Jamison, room 101 in the White House.
24. To "Aunt Lou," an elevator for Friday and Sunday night use, and more generous gentlemen callers able to tip her.

In witness whereof we hereunto subscribe our names and affix our seal to this, our last will and testament, at State Normal School, Farmville, Virginia, this 8th day of June, 1915.

Witness the following signatures and seal:

Evelyn Noell — President.
Edith Abbitt — V-President.
Lillian Hughes — Treasurer.

Finished, Yet Beginning

We've finished! We've reached the end
  Of the weary way that leads unto the height;
We've climbed o'er rugged rocks and tangled brush
  To a purer air, and a fairer light.

Was the journey but a mad rush for a goal?
  Attained—is all the strife and conflict o'er?
Were the flying hours and overcrowded days
  To end in this and nothing more?

If this be all, where does our victory lie,
  Although we've reached a fairer, broader view
And purer air? Sweet violets peeped from rocks below
  And clust'ring roses in the thicket grew;
We lacked the time to pick them; we could not stop
  To hear the birds; all nature called along the way
We could not wait to gaze at beckoning stars,
  The goal must be reached, we could not stay.

We're glad to finish. Why? Is the vict'ry worth the pain?
  The roses cheered the weary traveller's way while they,
If plucked, had died by now. The fragrant violets
  If picked, had lasted but a day.
So then we'll not regret the flowers we passed by on the way;
  In their sweet fragrance rest the weary find.
We struggled. Were our efforts worth the stars
  And clouds and music left behind?

The striving gave us strength, and friendships made
  During those hours of toil constant will remain; still
Was the victory worth the strain and effort spent?
  Ascending the rugged pathways of the hill?

We have the bracing air and broader view,
  The earliest flaming banners of the rising sun;
It's value comrades? The answer rests with you—
  Is our work finished, or begun?

A Chant of Hate Against Latin

(With apologies to Ernst Lissauer—"A Chant of Hate Against England")

French and German, they matter not,
"Ein Wort" for "a word"; "the word," "le mot."
We love them not, we hate them not,
We hold that these will have some real fate,
We have but one and only hate,
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone.

He is known to you all, he is known to you all,
He crouches behind bold Catilines fall
Full of cases and clauses, subjunctives and nouns,
Use "in" with the countries and "a" with the towns—
Oh, come let us stand at the judgment-place,
An oath to swear to, face to face,
An oath of bronze no wind can shake,
An oath for our sons and their sons to take.

Come, hear the word, repeat the word,
Throughout the Normal make it heard.
We will never forego our hate,
We have all but a single hate,
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone,
Latin!

At a banquet in the Reception Hall
Sat the State Normal Folk, one and all;
Like a saber-blow, like the swing of a sail,
One seized his glass held high to hail;
Sharp-snapt like the stroke of a rudder's play,
Spake three words only: "To the Day"!

Whose glass this fate?
They had all but a single hate
Who was thus known?
They had one foe and one alone—
Latin!

Take you the folk of the school in pay
With bars of ink your ramparts lay,
Bedeck the books with row on row,
Ye reckon well, but not well enough now,
French and German, they matter not,
"Ein Wort" for "a word"; "the word," "le mot."
We fight the battle with pony and zeal,
And the time that is coming! Peace will seal,
You will we hate with a lasting hate
We will never forego our hate,
Hate by water and hate by land,
Hate of the head and hate of the hand,
Hate of the grammar, yes, hate of the noun,
Hate of many millions choking down.
We love as one, we hate as one,
We have one foe and one alone—
Latin!

Senior Songs and Yells

TUNE: On the Way to Mandalay

We' re on our way, we're out to play,
Beneath the red and white we'll win
the day;
Oh, go ahead, our Senior team,
You're winning all the time.
We're justly proud
Of our little crowd
And we'll wave our banner, that's why
We're on our way, to win the day—
We've come to say good bye!

TUNE: This is the Life

We love the Junior team—
But ours is the best, ours is the best;
We love the Senior team,
Oh, when we are playing,
The Juniors dear are paying.
We love the Seniors better
Theirs is the team for mine.
No more Junior cheering—
Our team the goal is nearing;
Wave colors high,
Up to the sky—
Senior's the team for mine!

TUNE: Oh! My Love

Oh, we love our little Senior Team
Saints above! it is a perfect dream
Oh! my love, it makes me want to fight;
We will cheer it too,
For an hour or two,
And we can stay here all night.

Mistakes, Consequences and Schemes

SUSIE, seated at the table surrounded by hilarious school girls, was supposed to be eating her boarding school breakfast, but judging from the gales of laughter around the ring of girls, she was devoting most of her time to a description of one of her thrilling experiences. She was interrupted by the servant at her elbow.

"Mrs. Castleday wants to see you in her office at once. It is something important."

"Oh my sakes! What on earth does she want in such a hurry?" Susie laid her napkin unfolded on the table and followed the servant out through the labyrinth of tables. She began to think over all the pranks and mischief she had engaged in for the past month.

"She might at least have let me finish my breakfast in peace," she thought. "It is positively the limit to be called out of the dining room to be lectured."

She was really very much displeased with Mrs. Castleday by the time she reached the office, and she opened the door with a resolve to face her as brazenly as possible. The first thing that claimed her attention, however, was not Mrs. Castleday, but the vivid yellow envelope in her hand.

"Oh, Mrs. Castleday, is that a telegram for me?" "Let me see it quickly."

"Don't be nervous, Susie, I hope it is not very bad news. Have any of your relatives been ill?"

"No, please tell what has happened? Is anyone dying? Don't keep me in suspense." Susie reached impatiently for the telegram.

"Read it for yourself, because I cannot understand what it means to insinuate—unless someone is ill."

The paper seemed to dance up and down in her hands so that she could scarcely read, but she managed to grasp the following message, dated that morning from her home town and signed by her brother.

"Things look pretty serious. Critical time will soon be over. Have written details.—TED."

"What is the goose talking about. Mother is ill or Papa has been in an accident, I know. I am going home right away."

"Oh no! That would be silly. If they want you to come they would have said, 'Come at once.' Some one has evidently suddenly broken out with some contagious disease and they wrote you about it yesterday. As you will not receive the letter until today they telegraphed to keep you from feeling uneasy."

"I don't think so at all! They know me well enough to realize that I would come on the next train after receiving such a message. Dear old Ted! I told him to let me know if anything happened to anyone while I was away, and true to his darling old self he did it, of course."

"Susie, it is positively silly of you to think of going unless they send for you. Your brother may not know what is best. You must telegraph back at once and find out what is the trouble, or else wait until you receive his letter. There may be some contagious disease which you will contract if you go, and then you will be unable to return to school. Then you would be an extra burden and you are not experienced enough to help nurse anyone else."

"I don't care if it's—the leprosy! I want to have it too if they have it at home. As for returning to school, I don't mind that especially." Susie marched indignantly out of the office.

She was met at the corner of the office by her chums, Ruth and May. They were both very much excited on her account and rushed upon her with zest.

"Did she ask you about the fly paper that she stepped into the other night when she opened her door to "catch us"? "My! but you looked squelched," they exclaimed, breathless with interest.

"Girls look!" Susie drew the telegram from her sweater pocket and read it to them. "I know it means that some one at home is ill and Mrs. Castleday declares that I shall not go home until I hear in detail what it all means, and just because they did not say "come" in so many words. I don't care. I am going anyhow."

"Oh, you poor darling. We never imagined she wanted you for anything like that. Of course you are going." Both girls tried to compensate for their thoughtless greeting by being doubly sympathetic.

"There's the old chapel bell. I shall have only enough time to stuff a few things into my suit case, if I catch that nine-eight train. I'm glad I have my new hat ready to wear. Oh girls! I've just thought about it. I must telegraph them to have some one at the station to meet me, because, of course, Ted doesn't know what time I am coming. I can get that attended to at the station, however. Help me strap this thing up, will you? This will be very different from going home Christmas, when Ted had a crowd of college girls and boys to meet me at the train."

"Let me fix your hair while Ruth gets your suit."

"All right! I must get away while everyone is in chapel. Hurry with my hair! They are singing the first hymn now. If I am stopped it will break my heart. May, look out and see if any one is in sight."

"No, not a soul, but make haste. You know Mrs. Castleday always comes up on this hall during chapel."

"If they catch me now, I shall not get another chance to escape. Oh, is my hair done? Well, I guess I am ready!"

After a frantic search for a hat pin and her purse, Susie was ready to start for the station. The closing hymn had been started in chapel when after a last desperate stab at her hat pins and a hasty glance at the mirror, she started.

"We'll have to go out the back way and run fast or they'll be coming out of chapel and see us." Susie panted her directions, as she ran, to the other two girls tugging her suit case.

"I just saw Mrs. Castleday go up the front stairway," announced Ruth, likewise panting.

"Run faster! If I get caught I am ruined."

Having reached the station they felt more relieved. The hoarse whistle of the train sent a thrill of excitement through Susie, and for the first time she realized that she was acting positively against Mrs. Castleday's wishes. It was too late now to go back even if she had wanted to, for she would be seen by the girls and faculty coming from chapel, and would be in disgrace. Besides she had telegraphed them at home that she was coming. She tried to appear self-possessed and unconscious of the inquiring gaze of the people as she stepped into the train.

"Good bye! Write to me every day and tell the others where I am and—good bye." She had a feeling that the inmates of the train would think she was being expelled, and she felt so guilty that she felt them reading it on her face. The train pulled out, leaving two sympathetic girls looking after it until the last wave from Susie's handkerchief was indiscernible.

Having settled herself in a good seat and disposed of her baggage and ticket, there was nothing left for Susie to do but to settle down and divert herself as best she could with her thoughts. She had been so full of excitement and hurry that she had not really taken time to think before during the morning. Being suddenly transplanted from a multitude of chattering school girls, of which she was a unit, into a trainful of indifferent strangers was rather jarring, and she felt like an exile.

"When did I ever think I should be called home for anything like this," she thought. "If I only knew what the trouble is the suspense would not be quite so terrible. It isn't Ted who is ill at any rate, for he sent the message. I wish I had some one to talk to. This train is the slowest I ever travelled on. I wish I had asked Ruth to come with me."

A stream of tears was threatening to roll down her cheeks, but she happened to glance across the aisle and saw a placidly inquisitive old lady, who showed by the expression on her face, that it would only take a tear or two to bring her over to beg Susie to confide in her. Susie was naturally friendly and liked nice old ladies, but she felt at present that she could not bear to talk to this one, although she was dreadfully lonely. She took especial pains to keep her face turned to the window all the rest of the way home.

She was beginning to think that she must have passed the station while her eyes were covered with tears, when the conductor bawled out the name right over her head with such fierce distinction that she was angry with herself for having had such a silly idea. She glanced out of the window as the train slowed up and saw her mother standing on the platform with an expression on her face which she never wore except when she was worried about one of her children. As Susie reached the doorway she saw that her father and Ted were both there scrutinizing each emerging passenger for the face that they expected. What on earth did this mean! Evidently none of her family were ill or hurt in any way. "Father must have suddenly failed in business and is not able to keep me at school," was the only solution she could think of as she fell into the embracing arms of her family. They were especially careful of her, but no questions were asked by either member of the family until they were on the way home in Ted's car. Her mother sitting beside her on the back seat, saw the signs of Susie's pent-up feelings, and she thought it was time to give her relief. Putting her arm around her she said, "Now tell mother why you came and all about it."

The Virginian

Susie gave a slight start of surprise. "Why, I do not know what it is about yet, but since you telegraphed——

"Telegraphed! Who telegraphed?

"Why Ted, of course."

"Are you crazy, Susie? Ted has n't telegraphed anything."

"Indeed he did. Something was the matter with someone, and things were getting serious, and a great rigmarole, and of course I came right on. What did you mean by such a trick, Ted," she asked leaning over the back of the front seat.

"Pshaw," said Ted turning around and grinning, "I wrote you in the letter that our college team was playing a series of games with Lichton Academy, and I knew you were interested, so I was going to keep you posted as to our progress day by day." As he helped her from the car he added in an undertone, "That was a plucky little scheme you worked to come home for the games. Robert was just wishing for you today to cheer our team."

Joan of Arc

In France there lived a maiden
By angels loved so dear,
They spoke to her in voices
That none but she could hear.

They spoke of battles bloody
That France must undergo;
They said that she, Joan of Arc,
Should lead against the foe.

"Oh, blessed beings, spare me,
I am afraid to go
And leave my home and kindred
To fight against the foe.

"I am a lowly maiden
Content to sit and spin
And read my holy Bible—
I could not fight and win.

"Choose some more worthy leader
Whose heart no fear doth know,
To save our France from ruin,
And lead against the foe."

Then on her knees she begged them;
Her cries they would not heed;
"You are the chosen one," they said,
"To help in France's need."

Then up arose Joan from her knees,
Her eyes held hidden fire;
"My heart grows strong at duty's call
With courage you inspire."

The cruel wars came on apace,
Joan led 'gainst the foe;
With lilies white her emblem pure,
She conquered every foe.

The Spirit led her thru the strife,
The Spirit from on high,
The Spirit that will still live on
Although Jeanne d'Arc will die.

But jealous lords with base design
Did plot against her life;
Her power grew great with victory
And they must have her life.

"Oh spare me, spare me, sirs"! she cried,
"I only ask one boon,
To never tax one little spot,
The village I call "home."

But cruel were their hearts within
And filled with vice and greed;
They sold the maid who saved them from
The foe that made France bleed.

They sold her to the English king,
Ungrateful France! for shame!
That deed will ever be a blot
On thy once spotless name.

They put her to a cruel death
But e'er her soul had flown
"My voices! Jesus, Jesus!
Was her last dying moan.

Joan of Arc died on that day,
But her spirit leads us still,
The spirit angels brought from Heav'n
The Spirit of God's will.

A "S. N. S." Picnic

'T was Mundy morning in March, and the Bell sounded for us to start on our picnic to Taylor's Pond. We put on our Hoods of Faircloth, and wrapped ourselves in cloaks to Shield us from the Cold. As we emerged from the Hall into the Ayre, we feared that we were going to have a Rainey day, and possibly Hale, for the wind was blowing a Gale, but we were n't thwarted in our purpose.

In order to reach the Pond, we had to go over a stretch of five Miles including Groves, Woods, Boggs, Hills, Brooks, Branches and the Brown earth which was partially transformed in Green Meadows. Having reached our destination we sat down on Stones, Logs (of) Wood, and Hammocks, which we had brought with us, to rest. Clara complained of having a Payne in her Temples which was the Bane of her existence, but she was soon feeling better. Elizabeth suggested having an experience meeting while we were resting, and she made a motion that Nellie start first to give her experience.

"Well," began Nellie, "since it falls to my lot to take the initiative, I shall tell of an experience I had in London once. I was visiting at the Home of a Parson when one Knight(ly) Princess Louise, the daughter of King Edward(s) and a Ritsch Young Prince of Norman-dy came to the Parson to be married. I was asked to play the wedding March on the Orgain. The strains of Mendelssohn rang forth intermingled with the Pipers' music, and the bride and groom entered the room. The groom was just in the act of pulling the license from his Vest pocket when the King and his Ward entered the room followed by the house of Burgess, a Goldman, a Painter, a Marshall, a Porter, a Hunter, and a Miller. The King Rohred at the misconduct of his daughter in marrying without his consent, and he said he would Slaughter the Prince and make Princess Louise drink his Blood. The Prince and Princess with the aid of attendants escaped out of a side door, and went to Holland, where they were united in matrimony. The Loving couple remained there a Long time in order to avoid the vengence of the angry King which was bottled up for them. At length the Prince demanded Justice from the King, and they were Able to return to London once Moore."

Emma next gave her experience. "I once went on a Camping party, and we determined to do a novel thing by becoming more familiar with the political and literary world. We compared the works of Bryant, Cooper, and Scott. We told each other the Arthurian legends; one read a paper on the invention of Fulton's steamboat; and Burke's speech on Conciliation and Lee's Farewell Address to his Soldiers were recited. Hamilton's financial measures were enumerated, and interesting stories of Nancy Hawkins were cited. All of the foregoing proved to be very beneficial to us, and we enjoyed the trip immensely. On our way, returning from the trip, we came upon an old man with Gray hair and beard and with Green Glass-es on. He said that in Young-er days he had been thrifty, but accidently he had Pierce-d a Rake in his eyes, and had not been Able to see since that time. He asked us for some Nichols to pay the Price of his subsistence, as he was receiving Dunns every day. We complied with his request, and then went to our homes."

At this point the experience meeting came to an end for we were summoned to lunch. The menu consisted of Huylers, Byrds, Chiek-Codd, Rice, Fudge, and "Simmons." After luncheon we Row-ed on the Pond and fished for Bass. Some of the girls went to Hunt for Brown-eyed Susans and returned with a tremendous buneh of them.

Just before leaving for School, we sung some old songs, such as Sweet Genevieve, Where the River Shannon Flows, and Dixie.

When we returned to school the inclement March day had turned into a day like Somer(s), and the Byrds were nearly bursting their little throats singing Love songs.

—Jessie P. Dugger, '16.

A Lesson Plan

TOPIC: A MIDNIGHT FEAST

TEACHER'S AIMS—

Since "education is life itself," it is the aim of the teacher in a lesson of this kind to develop, (1) the social relations of the child at this age in order that she may become an efficient member of society in the Normal, (2) coöperation, (3) swiftness in execution of plan, (4) free play for motor activity.

PUPIL'S AIM—

To devour her share (and anyone else's) of food before detection.

To become skilled in eluding Home Department.

To become adept in feigning sleep.

To be able to shrivel into nothingness when detected, and if necessary to entirely disappear.

Appreciation thro' participation.

METHOD—

Grouping of girls in unsuspected places during the day. Collecting of money necessary, selection of committee for food and its preparation. (Care must be taken here, as even the walls have ears on occasions like this.)

Quiet on halls just after eleven; a flashing of lights at twelve; several heads poked out of doors, and turned in all directions, a slow procession creeping along toward the meeting-place; several hushed voices; a giggle and then a silence—a pushing and pulling down the dark stairs to the Auditorium (or any better place)—a rush for the basket of food. Silence! again broken by many clashing teeth upon the dainty repast. The slam of a door! Silence! A rush for one exit. The second floor reached; a roar of suppressed laughter and the scurrying of many feet in all directions.

If the food is devoured before detection, the effect wanted is not that of a stampede, but the movement of the returning crowd should be like the ships homeward bound from a peaceful voyage.

Care should be taken that too many girls do not stay in one room either before or after the feast, as congestion often causes detection.

If pursued, the offender of the peace should also be very careful as to the selection of her hiding place. If under the bed, she must be sure that she can easily suspend the body by fastening the toes and fingers in the springs, for often that article of furniture is shifted from its original position. If, on the other hand, she should desire to hide in the closet, she should first be sure that all dust-pans are in the corner, as these articles make a great deal of clatter if suddenly trampled under foot. The hook found in the northwest corner of any closet is an excellent one for suspending the body in a dilemma of this kind.

An excellent hiding-place is found on the bookshelf among the numerous texts, and the safest haven of rest here will be found among the pages of McMurray's "How to Study," a book which is found on nearly every shelf, but seldom opened.

If one should chance to gain such a safe position as behind the clock, she should be sure that the alarm is off.

After waiting several hours in any of the above mentioned comfortable positions, the head may first be poked out. If no one is in sight the right arm may be extended, and if that is not perceived by any eagle-eyed member of the Home Department, the whole body may be suddenly protruded. Galloping lickety-split down the hall, pause should not be made for friendly chat, but each girl should dash madly for her own room, leaping into bed, thus flattening her room-mate against the opposite wall.

The Virginian

One Day at Chapel

"OH, there's that horrid bell and I have n't half finished this room, and the bed's not made, and just look at that table! Besides, I wanted to write that promissory note for Arithmetic, and now I'll have to do it in chapel, and Mr. Lear and Doctor Jarman, and Miss Tabb and Miss Munoz just watch me all the time. I believe I'll cut! If I do, there comes an old Chapel Absence note, but if I don't, Mrs. Harris will leave a note about this awful room.

'My—mother—told—me—
To—take—this—one!' Chapel!

Well, here goes then!"

Off she goes, with her sweater on one arm, and hanging off the other, Arithmetic and plan book in one hand, pencil in her mouth, and with her free hand trying to screw up her hair in the back.

"Oh, who is the man next to Doctor Jarman? Isn't he good looking? I bet he's going to talk about old corn clubs or something. Hi, there Ruth, have you done that Arithmetic? I have n't either, I'm going to now. Lean back a little farther, May, so Doctor Jarman can't see me. That's right! What on earth do you reckon Mr. Eason and Miss Tabb are laughing at? I hope they are enjoying it, don't you? Let me see, 'I promise to pay to W. B. Davis'!—was it W. B. Davis, Mary? Oh, shuh! there goes the hymn, I do wish I was n't so near the front so I need n't stand up!"

—C. D., '16.

STUDENT TEACHER—"Your assignment for tomorrow is———
PUPIL—"Hurry up, Miss———, the bell's rung and you've got to go to Special Spelling."

PROFESSOR (to pupil who has just finished a lengthy explanation)—"Very good, but that's considering it from a teacher's stand-point. Can't you give it more of a human touch?"
PUPIL—"Well, aren't teachers human?"

THE LESSER OF TWO EVILS

HEAD OF HOME DEPARTMENT—"Mary, I've questioned every one else on your hall so it must have been you who was so unladylike as to scream last night, I'm shoc———"
MARY—"Why, I wasn't even on my hall last night! Er-l-er—mean———
HEAD OF HOME DEPARTMENT—"Well, why weren't you there? Ah! Campused for two weeks?"

JUNIOR (to Senior)—"Which would you say, the faculty was, or the faculty were——?"
SENIOR (aroused from making a lesson plan)—"You will have learned by this time next year that the Faculty is rather singular, My dear."

GUILTY CONSCIENCE

AWKWARD VISITOR (to pretty young girl, who was about to finish her course at a fashionable boarding school)—"I suppose you feel deeply indebted to this school for all it has given you."
GIRL (freezingly)—"I am not accustomed to talking of family matters with outsiders."

POOR NORMAL SCHOOL GIRLS

MR. LEAR (in chapel)—"The Richmond Glee Club will be here Monday night. All people thirty-five cents. Normal School Girls twenty-five cents."

WANTED TO KNOW WHO SAID THIS: "I will have to admit that the best teacher of domestic science is a woman."

TEACHER—"Why is it that we naturally bend the head too much to the front?"
BRIGHT PUPIL—"Because that is man's weakest spot."

A MISTAKE

Ladies, skip this paragraph. It is really unfit for publication. It got into my papers by mistake and I asked the printers to destroy it or set it wrong-side up.

If there's anything that worries a lady,
It's something she ought not to know!
But you bet she'll find out somehow—
If she gets the least kind of a show.
Now we'll wager ten cents to a farthing
This poem she's already read—
For we know she'd get at it somehow
If she had to stand on her head.

"THIS IS THE LIFE"

"Much Ado About Nothing"

—and Oh! those lesson plans—

"In the Wee Small Hours—"

On the Job—

The Virginian

Acknowledgment

WE, The Virginian Staff, wish to take this space as a note of thanks to those who have been so liberal with contributions, for art work to Marie Noell, Mary Morris, Lelia Richardson, Temple Snelling, Maggie Zernow, Lucy Allen, Marguerite Archambault, Nancy Lewis, Evelyn Noell, Mary Belle Frantz and Mildred Edwards; to Mr. Lear for his invaluable aid and many suggestions, and to Mr. Eason, Mr. Long and Mr. Grainger for their services. We thank them all.

A TIP TO THE WISE

ARE YOU ONE OF THE MANY WHO HAVE

The New Students' Reference Work?

¶ It will be a guide and an inspiration to you in the preparation of your regular school work.

"I am greatly pleased with The New Students' Reference Work. The Lesson Outlines will prove very helpful."
P. P. CLAXTON
U. S. Comm'r of Education

"I have indeed found The New Students' Reference Work to be very helpful."
CONSTANCE RUMBOUGH,

THE COLLEGE Photographer

THE best is none too good for reproduction. You must have quality in your photographs to obtain results from your engraver. Our best advertisement is a satisfied patron. This makes our tenth year we have made the V. P. I. work, the fourth year at Hollins College, and the fourth year at the State Normal at Farmville. The work this year is 25% better than our last year. Out of 600 individual sittings and 75 8x10 groups for three schools and colleges, not one complaint has reached us. Pretty good record, isn't it? A contract placed with us secures the benefit of expert service. Write us now for 1916 contracts.
